ABSTRACT

The new Government has announced several reforms related to the Czech justice system, some of which follow up on efforts of the previous Government. A planned reform of disciplinary proceedings against judges aims to introduce the possibility to appeal and a new reform of the prosecution service is under preparation, introducing, among others, changes relating to the term of office and dismissal of the Prosecutor General. Both initiatives aim to further strengthen the independence of the justice system. An amendment of the selection procedure for judges has entered into force. Efforts to improve the digitalisation of justice, including publication of judgments and preparation of a digital file management system, progress slowly. Efficiency of proceedings has improved in the administrative justice system.

The legal and institutional framework to address corruption is broadly in place, and the new Government has prioritised some anti-corruption measures. The Government is drafting a new Anti-Corruption Strategy to be implemented as of 2023 but concerns exist over the effective and consistent implementation of all measures in the current strategy and action plan. Several planned reforms were not adopted before the end of the parliamentary term in 2021, including on lobbying, whistleblowing, the Supreme Audit Office mandate, and a code of conduct for members of Parliament. The new Government has announced its intention to continue to fight corruption, including through pending legislative reforms on conflicts of interest and whistleblower protection. Cases of high-level corruption remain a concern, in particular in a context of delayed proceedings. In addition, the use of presidential pardoning power in a high-level corruption case led to public debate. Ethics rules for both chambers of the Parliament remain lacking. Rules on revolving doors for members of Government, Parliament and civil service remain limited. An evaluation of the legislation on political party financing is planned.

Constitutional rules guarantee freedom of expression and the right to information. Rules to enhance transparency of beneficial ownership of media outlets enacted in 2021 still require full implementation and concerns persist with regard to the lack of full ownership transparency as well as conflict of interests. The independence of the Czech media regulator is expected to be further enhanced, while political controversies affecting Czech public service television have led to calls to overhaul the Czech Television Act given that the current system does not prevent the political majority in the Chamber of Deputies, via political influence over the Councils, from securing the dismissal of a Director-General. Unlike the case with most sectors of the economy, the media sector did not benefit from any specific support scheme to counter the effects of the COVID-19 pandemic. There have been no developments with regard to state advertising and access to information. Support for the needs of journalists and their working conditions is missing while harassment of journalists remains part of the political landscape.

The use of the accelerated legislative procedure decreased. The validity of the Pandemic Act has been extended until November 2022. The Ministry of Health conducted an internal audit of the adoption process of pandemic measures, after several had been annulled by courts. Work to enhance the participation of civil society organisations in the decision-making process is ongoing. While the Ombudsperson performs some of the tasks of the National Human Rights Institution (NHRI), other typical tasks remain unassigned and there are no specific plans to establish an NHRI. Statements of the Ombudsperson regarding Roma or LGBTIQ people continued to raise concerns. Access to public funding of civil society organisation raises some concerns. The space for civil society has been downgraded from open to narrowed by observers.

RECOMMENDATIONS

In addition to recalling the commitments made under the national Recovery and Resilience Plan relating to certain aspects of the justice system and the anti-corruption framework, it is recommended to Czechia to:

- Take forward the reform of the prosecution service retaining the original aim to introduce safeguards for the dismissal of the Prosecutor General and other chief public prosecutors, taking into account European standards on the independence and autonomy of the prosecution.
- Take measures to reduce the length of proceedings to ensure a robust track record of investigations, prosecutions and final judgments in high-level corruption cases.
- Strengthen the integrity framework for members of Parliament, in particular by ensuring that Codes of Ethics are in place for both Houses of Parliament.
- Complete the revision of legislation on asset declarations and on conflict of interests, including by clarifying the definition of beneficial ownership and progress with further reforms relating to transparency of information on media ownership.
- Strengthen the rules and mechanisms to enhance the independent governance of public service media taking into account European standards on public service media.
- Take steps to establish a National Human Rights Institution taking into account the UN Paris Principles.

I. JUSTICE SYSTEM

The Czech justice system is composed of 86 district courts, eight regional courts, two high courts, the Supreme Court and the Supreme Administrative Court¹. The Constitutional Court is tasked with guaranteeing constitutionality of legislation, and with the protection of fundamental human rights and freedoms. The central body of state responsible for the administration of the courts is the Ministry of Justice. The Ministry of Justice performs state administration of high, regional and district courts to the extent stipulated by law², either directly or through the presidents of these courts. These various authorities take into account the opinions of the relevant judicial councils, which are established at the Supreme Court, the Supreme Administrative Court, high courts, regional courts and larger district courts. Judges are appointed by the President of the Republic, from candidates selected by selection committees and presented by the Minister of Justice. The Prosecution Service is part of the executive branch³. Public prosecutors are appointed into their office for an indefinite time by the Minister of Justice on a proposal from the Prosecutor General. The Prosecutor General is appointed and recalled by the Government on a proposal from the Minister of Justice. Czechia participates in the European Public Prosecutor's Office (EPPO). The Bar Association is established by law and is independent. It performs public administration in the area of the legal profession and provides self-regulation for the entire profession. The self-governing power of the Bar is limited by the power of the Minister of Justice in the areas listed by law.

Independence

The level of perceived judicial independence in Czechia continues to be average among both the general public and companies. Overall, 57% of the general population and 55% of companies perceive the level of independence of courts and judges to be 'fairly or very good' in 2022⁴. According to data in the 2022 EU Justice Scoreboard, both figures have increased in comparison to 2021 (51% for the general public and 51% for companies), as well as in comparison to 2016 (47% for the general public and 37% for companies).

The new Government has announced several reform plans, including a re-tabling of the reform of the system of disciplinary proceedings against judges. As a general rule, legislative proceedings that are not concluded before parliamentary elections are not carried over to the next mandate period and if a newly elected Government intends to continue with the process, it has to submit a new legislative proposal. This was the case for several legislative proposals referred to in the 2021 Rule of Law Report⁵, which lapsed after the October 2021 parliamentary elections, notably the amendment of the Act on proceedings relating to judges⁶ and the reform of prosecution service (see below in this Section). The Programme manifesto of the new Government formed after the elections announced the intention to pursue several reforms related to the justice system⁷. The envisaged changes include a reform of the criminal and civil procedure codes⁸, further digitalisation of the justice system (see below in this Section) and protection of the activities of the Bar Association and other professional associations. The Ministry of Justice started preparations to re-submit⁹ the reform of the disciplinary procedure against judges¹⁰, retaining the original aim to introduce the possibility to appeal¹¹ decisions taken by a disciplinary court¹². This aim is consistent with European standards¹³ and follows a GRECO recommendation¹⁴.

The amended selection procedures for judges entered into force. As reported in the 2021 Rule of Law Report¹⁵, the amendment of the Act on courts and judges, adopted in June 2021¹⁶, aims to set up a transparent and uniform system of recruitment and selection of judges and court presidents, whereas previously this procedure was not regulated in the legislation. The amendment entered into force on 1 January 2022¹⁷. The first series of selection procedures under the new legislation are currently ongoing¹⁸. Stakeholders have welcomed the change, stating that it improves the transparency and consistency of the selection process¹⁹, with the College of Regional Court Presidents calling for amendments of certain technical aspects in the law and implementing decree to ensure a smooth selection process²⁰. In reaction, the Ministry of Justice published a clarification of several provisions of the legislation and conducts a further analysis of potential ambiguities²¹. A key feature of the new system is the composition of the selection committees with majority of judges²², which is consistent with European standards²³.

The Ministry of Justice started preparing a reform of the prosecution service. A reform of the prosecution service has long been a topic of political debate²⁴ and forms part of GRECO recommendations²⁵. The Ministry of Justice is working on a new proposal, scheduled for submission to the Government in December 2022²⁶. It is planned to include²⁷ a fixed term of office for the Prosecutor General and other chief prosecutors²⁸, and to stipulate that they can be dismissed only as a result of disciplinary proceedings²⁹, which would be consistent with European standards³⁰.

Quality

Digitalisation of justice progresses slowly. While the work on the digitalisation projects mentioned in the 2021 Rule of Law Report³¹, most notably the e-file and a database of court decisions, continues³², stakeholders point to the generally slow progress and delays in the digitalisation of justice³³. Although procedural rules allowing digital technology in courts have been in place³⁴, the actual use of digital technology and secure electronic communication tools by courts and prosecution services is very low³⁵. The case management system can still be used only in proceedings regarding orders for payment, judges and staff cannot yet, across the board, work securely remotely, and it is not possible to communicate securely electronically between ²² The committee for selection of judges has five members. Two are employees of the Ministry of Justice, two are judges appointed on the proposal of a president of respective regional court and one is a judge appointed on a joint proposal of the presidents on the Supreme Court and the Supreme Administrative Court. The committee for selection of court presidents have five members; its composition varies depending on the instance of the court, but in general one member is Deputy Minister of Justice, one expert on organization of courts and three court presidents. courts and lawyers, notaries and bailiffs or other judicial officers³⁶. With the e-file system not yet available, possibilities for court users to initiate proceedings electronically and follow them online are limited³⁷. Following an amendment of the Act on Courts and Judges, which came into effect on 9 June 2021, district, regional and high courts will be obliged to publish their final judgments³⁸, as of 1 July 2022, in a publicly accessible database managed by the Ministry of Justice³⁹. The database is supported by a customised anonymisation application and already operating in a pilot stage⁴⁰.

The Ministry of Justice is adjusting the method of determination of the number and distribution of judicial posts, while salaries of judges have been frozen. Presidents of regional courts suggested to the Ministry of Justice an adjustment of the method based on which the Ministry determines the number of judicial posts at each court. The Ministry is currently analysing the document⁴¹. This comes in reaction to concerns that the existing methodology did not reflect the real workload of courts, as reported in the 2021 Rule of Law Report⁴². The salaries of judges and other high level officials⁴³, which are normally adjusted automatically every year⁴⁴, have been frozen at the same level as in 2020⁴⁵ due to the economic consequences of the COVID-19 pandemic⁴⁶, a fact which was criticised by judges⁴⁷ and prosecutors⁴⁸.

Efficiency

Efficiency of proceedings in administrative cases has improved. While the justice system overall performs efficiently, there is room for improvement in the length of administrative cases, as reported in the 2020 and 2021 Rule of Law Reports⁴⁹. Over the past years, however, the estimated length of administrative cases has been decreasing (to 317 days in first instance courts in 2020 compared to 356 days in 2019 and 421 days in 2016)⁵⁰. The clearance rate has also improved (113 % at first instance courts in 2020 compared to 107 % in 2019 and 88 % in 2018⁵¹) suggesting that courts continue to be able to address backlogs. This positive development could be the result of a continued effort to increase the number of judges and staff in administrative departments of courts⁵². The estimated length of litigious civil and commercial cases, while overall low, increased in 2020 (to 160 days in the first instance in 2020 compared to 140 days in 2019)⁵³, possibly as a result of the COVID-19 pandemic and related measures.

II. ANTI-CORRUPTION FRAMEWORK

Czechia has the legislative and institutional framework to prevent and fight corruption largely in place. The Conflicts of Interest and Anti-Corruption Department of the Ministry of Justice is in charge of the coordination and monitoring of the national Anti-Corruption Strategy 2018-2022, which is Czechia's strategic framework for anti-corruption at the governmental level. The Anti-Corruption Council acts as an advisory body to the Government. In cooperation with the prosecution service, the National Organised Crime Agency is the police unit with country-wide competence to investigate high-level corruption offences⁵⁴. The Financial Analytical Office acts as Czechia's Financial Intelligence Unit. The Supreme Audit Office reviews the state's management of public revenue and expenditure and its findings may contribute to the identification of corruption risks.

The perception among experts and business executives is that the level of corruption in the public sector remains relatively high. In the 2021 Corruption Perceptions Index by Transparency International, Czechia scores 54/100 and ranks 14th in the European Union and 49th globally⁵⁵. This perception has been relatively stable over the past five years⁵⁶. The 2022 Special Eurobarometer on Corruption shows that 78% of respondents consider corruption widespread in their country (EU average 68%) and 20% of respondents feel personally affected by corruption in their daily lives (EU average 24%)⁵⁷. As regards businesses, 67% of companies consider that corruption is widespread (EU average 63%) and 34% consider that that corruption is a problem when doing business (EU average 34%)⁵⁸. Furthermore, 29% of respondents find that there are enough successful prosecutions to deter people from corrupt practices (EU average 34%)⁵⁹, while 27% of companies believe that people and businesses caught for bribing a senior official are appropriately punished (EU average 29%)⁶⁰.

⁵⁴ Other cases of corruption are dealt with by regional directorates of the police, with the National Organised Crime Agency being able to take over the cases at any time. This Agency also serves as a law enforcement contact point for OLAF as regards crimes against financial interest of the EU.

⁵⁶ In 2017 the score was 57, while, in 2021, the score is 54. The score significantly increases/decreases when it changes more than five points; improves/deteriorates (changes between 4-5 points); is relatively stable (changes from 1-3 points) in the last five years.

The Anti-Corruption Strategy 2018-2022 is in its last year of implementation, and a new strategy is being developed. The Anti-Corruption Plan 2021-2022⁶¹ continues to be implemented, as part of the last year of the 2018-2022 Anti-Corruption Strategy⁶². The main priorities of the plan are an effective and independent government, transparency and open access to information, the efficient use of state property, and the development of civil society. Main legislative measures included are the adoption of the whistleblowing and lobbying legislation (see below in this Section)⁶³. While only an interim evaluation of the 2021-2022 action plan was carried out (as the action plan is still being implemented)⁶⁴, it shows that the majority of measures were successfully implemented although delays occurred in the Parliament with regards to draft legislation, the introduction of some sector-specific measures in the energy and health sectors, and the adoption of the open government plan⁶⁵. Nonetheless, stakeholders expressed concerns over the effective and consistent implementation of all measures identified in the yearly action plans, in particular regarding the timely completion of actions under the plans and the political will to actually move forward and adopt some of the envisaged legislative reforms in the Parliament⁶⁶. The drafting of a new Anti-Corruption Strategy is proceeding, with a stakeholder consultation ongoing and the adoption by the government foreseen by the end of 2022⁶⁷. The Government intends to take on board conclusions of previous evaluations and lessons learned in the new strategy⁶⁸. The Strategy for the Fight against Fraud and Corruption within EU Funds remains in force without changes, but is expected to be revised by the end of the year to introduce new EU frameworks, and a specific action plan for 2022 was adopted⁶⁹. A new corruption measuring methodology is also under development⁷⁰.

The Government has announced its intention to continue reforms to fight corruption although the role of the Anti-Corruption Council remains unclear. The new Government, which took office in January 2022, has announced its intention to strengthen the fight against corruption, including through the adoption of a number of pending legislative reforms on conflicts of interest and whistleblower protection (see below in this Section)⁷¹. Questions remain over how the Anti-Corruption Council will fulfil its role as an advisory body to the Government. While the Council has not yet met since the new Government was appointed, the Ministry of Justice foresees no changes in its functioning⁷². Some stakeholders have pointed out that more regular meetings of the Council, which currently meets once per year, could be beneficial for highlighting challenges and giving input to the government's anti-corruption policy⁷³.

Corruption-related investigations, prosecutions and convictions remain at a stable level, with a generally lower occurrence of corruption attributed to the COVID-19 pandemic.

In 2021, the Czech law enforcement authorities opened 150 corruption-related investigations (compared to 180 in 2020) and prosecuted 140 individuals for corruption offences or suspicions thereof (compared to 180 individuals in 2020)⁷⁴. In total, 134 persons were brought before a court (compared to 169 in 2020)⁷⁵, while 114 got convicted for corruption in the course of 2021 (compared to 111 individuals in 2020). Last year has seen 15 acquittals for corruption (compared to 45 in the previous year)⁷⁶. Law enforcement authorities caution that statistics fluctuated during 2020 and 2021 due to the effects of COVID-19 measures, in particular lockdowns, with an overall lower crime rate seen than the period before the pandemic⁷⁷.

High-level corruption cases remain a point of attention due to delays in proceedings while the use of presidential pardoning power in a high-level corruption case led to public debate. A number of high-level corruption investigations and cases involving both former and current high-level officials⁷⁸ continue, including in relation to subsidy fraud. While the justice system is generally functioning efficiently (see Section I), concerns over its performance in such high-level corruption cases exist due to the length of the proceedings at all stages of the process including the investigation, prosecution and adjudication⁷⁹. Concerns remain⁸⁰ in some instances regarding the management and distribution of EU funds, with the Czech Court of Audit indicating a relative increase in the amount of reported irregularities and suspected

Resources of and cooperation between institutions in the fight against corruption remain at a good level overall. The police and the Prosecution Service consider that the resources⁸⁷ and the level of specialisation of investigators and prosecutors, as well as their access to relevant information, is sufficient to carry out their tasks in the repression of corruption. Cooperation between the prosecution service, police and other agencies such as the Financial Intelligence Unit, tax and customs continues to function well.⁸⁸ The analytical capacity of the police is being evaluated. The police plan to pilot a uniform analytical tool in their investigations as of 2023, which should further strengthen analytical capacity also in corruption-related investigations. Work on these initiatives continues but was delayed by the COVID-19 pandemic and the Russian invasion of Ukraine⁸⁹.

Enforcement in foreign bribery cases remains limited although structures are in place. Czechia fulfilled an additional recommendation of the OECD Working Group on Bribery in relation to the automatic publishing of court judgments in foreign bribery cases. The main outstanding recommendations focus on legislation related to whistleblowers (see below in this Section) and the independence of prosecutors and courts (see Section I)⁹⁰ While the necessary structures are in place, only a limited number of cases are detected and prosecuted⁹¹. Conflict of interest legislation is being revised after issues with its practical application emerged in previous years. Revised legislation on conflicts of interest⁹³ was put forward by a group of members of Parliament in December 2021 and received support from the new Government (see also below, Section III). The revision considers that the currently applicable legislation, which covers all public officials (including ministers, state secretaries, members of Parliament, etc.)⁹⁴, needed to be updated in particular to clarify the definition of the actual beneficial owner of certain companies or conglomerates⁹⁵. This also includes a prohibition on the acceptance of subsidies and investment incentives by public officials and companies they actually own⁹⁶. The sanctioning mechanism would also be revised, with an increased focus on applying mitigating measures before a fine is issued. While the Office for the Supervision of the Finances of Political Parties and Movements⁹⁷ would obtain additional powers to monitor cases in relation to media ownership, no changes to the supervision regime are planned,⁹⁸ despite a recommendation from GRECO in that respect⁹⁹. The draft legislation is still in the parliamentary process.

The asset declaration regime is currently under revision to bring it into compliance with a 2020 Constitutional Court ruling. While revised provisions on asset declarations were initially included in the draft conflict of interest legislation (see above)¹⁰⁰, members of Parliament decided to split off provisions on asset declarations and pass them in a separate bill, due to the lengthy parliamentary process on the main bill¹⁰¹. This separate bill, which aims to accommodate the 2020 ruling of the Constitutional Court on asset declarations, was passed by the Chamber of Deputies and the Senate in June 2022 and is now awaiting signature by the President¹⁰². The bill would set out rules on access and transparency of the declarations for the public, mainly by including a prior request before being granted access to the register of declarations. and dependents) is not taken up in this law¹⁰³, although a GRECO recommendation on this topic remains outstanding¹⁰⁴.

Ethics rules for civil servants are being reviewed while a comprehensive ethics framework for both chambers of the Parliament remains lacking. As mentioned in the 2021 Rule of Law Report, there are no codes of ethics in place, and a comprehensive framework is lacking in relation to gifts and benefits for members of Parliament¹⁰⁵. The draft of the revised Code of Ethics for Members of the Chamber of Deputies, a code of conduct which has been debated in the Parliament since 2020¹⁰⁶, was not approved and lapsed following the end of the parliamentary term. Since the beginning of the new parliamentary term, no further activity on this issue has been noted¹⁰⁷. The Senate remains without a Code of Ethics, nor are there any current plans to establish one¹⁰⁸. The recommendations from GRECO to adopt a Code of Ethics in both chambers of Parliament thus remain unfulfilled¹⁰⁹. The existing Code of Ethics for the civil service is under review, with the aim to make it more easily understandable and practicable¹¹⁰.

Post-employment rules are in place for a limited number of civil servant positions and some parts of the Government but could be improved and better monitored. Overall, rules on ‘revolving doors’ remain unchanged. A limited number of civil service positions¹¹¹ have a mandatory one-year cooling-off period from working in the same sector. This concerns mostly positions dealing with sensitive matters such as public procurement for certain sectors¹¹². While the existing law on conflicts of interest provides for a one-year cooling-off period for Government members and top-level positions before taking up roles with a company that has had Government contracts in the past three years, it relies on the same sanctioning mechanism as conflicts of interest issues, which is currently being revised. The existing register of governmental contracts, in which it is compulsory for government institutions to publish the contracts they conclude¹¹³, continues to be cited as a good practice that facilitates overall transparency and the discovery of irregularities¹¹⁴.

The proposed legislation on lobbying was not adopted before the parliamentary elections and the new Government is yet to propose similar legislation. The proposed lobbying regulation, as referred to in the 2021 Rule of Law Report¹¹⁵, was not adopted before the end of the Parliamentary term in October 2021, and therefore lapsed¹¹⁶. Similar draft legislation, including a legislative footprint and a transparency register¹¹⁷, is expected to be re-submitted to the new Government for its approval by the end of December 2022¹¹⁸. Some stakeholders have raised doubts regarding the Government's commitment in this regard¹¹⁹, notably as the new Government's programme statement did not explicitly include a mention of this pending revision¹²⁰. Concerns have been raised that in the absence of such legislation, the transparency of contacts with lobbyists remains low¹²¹.

Political party financing legislation is in place, though challenges remain with implementation in practice. Extensive legislation on political party financing is in place and is broadly applied¹²². Issues remain, however, with the verification of donations limits and the monitoring of advertising rules being particularly challenging¹²³. The Office for the Supervision of the Finances of Political Parties and Movements is planning to conduct an analysis of gaps in the legislation of political party financing by the end of this year and to propose further steps¹²⁴.

Amendments to the Constitution to strengthen the Supreme Audit Office have not been approved. The constitutional amendments, as discussed in the 2021 Rule of Law Report, were voted down in the Senate (after previous approval in the Chamber of Deputies)¹²⁵. The legislation would have extended the mandate of the Supreme Audit Office, allowing it to also audit the public spending of local governments and state-owned companies (i.e. majority-owned or controlled by the state or a local government)¹²⁶. The re-submission of legislation to extend the mandate has been included in the new Government programme¹²⁷. No changes are foreseen regarding political nominations at state-owned enterprises¹²⁸, despite criticism in that regard, as reported in the 2021 Rule of Law Report¹²⁹. A reform of the whistleblower protection legislation is ongoing. As the revised legislation, aiming to transpose the EU Whistleblower Directive,¹³¹ was not approved in Parliament before the end of its term, it lapsed¹³². The revised legislation is expected to be re-approved by the government during 2022, with slight amendments compared to the previous draft reforms, in particular relating to the scope of crimes covered¹³³, after which it will have to be taken up by Parliament.

Corruption-risks related to the COVID-19 pandemic are being audited and analysed. An internal audit in the health sector in the course of the COVID-19 pandemic helped identify a new approach to mitigating corruption risks for the Ministry of Health¹³⁴. The Court of Audit is also looking into the Government's COVID-19 response. An initial audit found signs of inefficiencies, a decrease in transparency in the purchase of personal protective equipment¹³⁵ and chaos and improvisation in the construction of IT systems to manage the pandemic¹³⁶. Further audits are ongoing on the pay-out of a Government bonus linked to the COVID-19 measures¹³⁷.

III. MEDIA PLURALISM AND MEDIA FREEDOM

Freedom of expression and the right to information are guaranteed by the Czech Charter of Fundamental Rights and Basic Freedoms. The Act on Radio and Television Broadcasting, guarantees the independence of the Czech media regulator while the Czech Television Act provides the framework for the supervision and independence of Czech public service media. The Act on Free Access to Information¹³⁸ regulates access to information held by public authorities¹³⁹.

The independence of the media regulator, the Council for Radio and Television Broadcasting, is expected to be strengthened via pending amendments to the Act on Radio and Television Broadcasting. The reform geared at, among others, transposing the AVMS Directive¹⁴⁰ including by a strengthening of the independence of the media regulator, scheduled for August 2020¹⁴¹ was not approved by the Parliament before the end of its term, and consequently lapsed¹⁴². The new Government subsequently submitted a very similar proposal to Parliament¹⁴³. The proposed amendments¹⁴⁴ would eliminate the role of the Prime Minister in the nomination and dismissal of Council members as they would place both procedures fully in the hands of the Chamber of Deputies. The reform would simultaneously limit the power of the Chamber of Deputies in the sense that only the dismissal of individual Council members would be possible, thereby strengthening the independence of the Council as a body. Furthermore, the amendments would require the Parliament to provide substantiated reasons for any dismissal decision and would expressly provide for a right of reply and a right of defense before the Chamber of Deputies for any member facing dismissal.

Concerns voiced with regard to the selection process and the independence of the members of the Czech TV supervisory board¹⁴⁵ have led to calls for an overhaul of the relevant provisions of the Czech Television Act¹⁴⁶. Under the Act, the supervisory functions of Czech public service media television and radio are the responsibility, respectively, of the Czech Television Council (15 members) and the Czech Radio Council (nine members). Under the current legislation Council members are appointed for a 6-year term by the Chamber of Deputies following nominations made by ‘organizations and associations representing cultural, regional, social, trade union, employer, religious, educational, scientific, environmental and national interests’¹⁴⁷. The Councils, by qualified majority, appoint the relevant Directors-General whose salaries are subject to Council approval. The Directors-General must seek the relevant Council’s approval when appointing studio directors and must consult the Council prior to filling or vacating senior management positions. The Councils may remove a Director-General from office by a two-thirds majority if, in the opinion of the Council, he or she has not ensured the fulfilment of the broadcaster’s public service role. While the Act ensures editorial independence by expressly stipulating that the Councils shall have no say in programming¹⁴⁸, the current system does not prevent the political majority in the Chamber of Deputies, via political influence over the Councils, from securing the dismissal of a Director-General. A bill currently under discussion would distribute nominations to the relevant Councils between the Chamber of Deputies and the Senate. Law No. 348/2005 governs the funding of Czech public service media which is, apart from advertising revenues, largely dependent on a fee levied on households. It has been pointed out that the amount of the fee, which has not been revised since 2008, will not provide sufficient funding going forward unless it is raised¹⁴⁹. Due to these concerns, the Media Pluralism Monitor (MPM) 2022 now considers the independence of public service media governance and funding to be an area presenting high risk¹⁵⁰.

Reforms have partially addressed concerns relating to lack of media ownership transparency. The reforms introduced in 2021¹⁵¹ which guarantee public access, via a registry held by the Ministry of Justice, to a limited amount of ownership information, and establish mechanisms enabling certain authorities to sanction the absence of required data are considered to only partially address the issue. Given that the system obliges companies to provide information about their ultimate owners does not provide for disclosure of full ownership structures to the general public, outside of the Public Register of Corporate Entities, the Media Pluralism Monitor (MPM) 2022 once more considers this as a high risk area, albeit with a reduced risk level¹⁵². Currently the Council for Radio and Television Broadcasting does not have access to the entirety of the data held by the Ministry of Justice and has asked for a remedy thereto¹⁵³. High concentration continues to characterise different media sub-sectors, in particular the regional daily press market¹⁵⁴.

Concerns persist with regard to political independence of the media due to the conflation of political and media interests. This has mainly concerned the former Prime Minister's media interests as well as certain other media owners who have either been active in politics or who have openly declared their political ambitions¹⁵⁵. In the case of the former Prime Minister, though his company Agrofert has been in a trust fund since 2017, he is nonetheless still regarded as its beneficial owner¹⁵⁶. With a view to addressing this problem, a group of MPs representing the governing political parties have drafted an amendment to the Conflict of Interest Act¹⁵⁷ (see also above, Section II) which would strengthen the current conditions and preventing active politicians from any form of involvement in print or audio-visual media business exceeding certain revenue thresholds¹⁵⁸. Furthermore, the fact that there are no rules ensuring transparency in state advertising exacerbates suspicions of favouritism by state-owned companies to media close to the government¹⁵⁹.

Support for the needs of journalists and their working conditions is missing while legal and verbal harassment of journalists remains part of the political landscape. The alerts registered since the publication of the last rule of law report and published by the Council of Europe Platform to promote the protection of journalism and the safety of journalists, concern a defamation case lodged by the former Deputy Prime Minister against a media house, a verbal attack on a journalist by the former Prime Minister on the campaign trail, a criminal complaint lodged against an editor and a cyber attack against a news website¹⁶⁰. According to the Media Pluralism Monitor, the main professional association representing journalists, the Czech

IV. OTHER INSTITUTIONAL ISSUES RELATED TO CHECKS AND BALANCES

Czechia has a bicameral parliamentary system of government¹⁶² with a directly elected President. Legislative proposals can be submitted by a member of the Chamber of Deputies, a group of members of the Chamber of Deputies, the Senate, the Government, or representative bodies of higher self-governing regions¹⁶³. The Constitutional Court can carry out ex-post constitutional review. In addition to the justice system, the Ombudsperson’s Office and civil society play a role in the system of checks and balances.

The number of acts adopted in accelerated legislative procedure has decreased. Between February 2021 and November 2021, out of total 74 approved acts 11 acts were adopted in the shortened emergency legislative procedure and 10 acts were adopted in a fast-track legislative procedure¹⁶⁴, which represents a decrease in comparison to the 60 acts adopted in the shortened emergency legislative procedure during the last reporting period¹⁶⁵. As in the preceding reporting period, some of these acts were not related to the COVID-19 pandemic¹⁶⁶.

On 1 January 2022, Czechia had two leading judgments of the European Court of Human Rights pending implementation¹⁶⁷. At that time, Czechia’s rate of leading judgments from the past 10 years that remained pending was only at 5% and the average time that the judgments had been pending implementation was 7 years and 8 months¹⁶⁸. This figure is influenced by a case pending implementation for 14 years, which concerns discrimination in education of Roma children¹⁶⁹. On 1 July 2022, the number of leading judgments pending implementation remains two¹⁷⁰.

Validity of the Pandemic Act has been extended until November 2022 after public debate.

Following several extensions and declaration of states of emergency in 2020 and early 2021¹⁷¹, the Government declared a state of emergency due to the COVID-19 pandemic again as of 26 November 2021. It lasted until 25 December 2021. Another state of emergency was declared as of 4 March 2022 in reaction to the situation of the large number of refugees arriving from Ukraine¹⁷². The Pandemic Act, adopted in February 2021, as reported in the 2021 Rule of Law Report¹⁷³, was reviewed by the Constitutional Court¹⁷⁴, which upheld the majority of the Act¹⁷⁵. The sections of the Act which regulate extraordinary measures were originally valid only until 28 February 2022, however after political discussions¹⁷⁶, their validity was extended until 30 November 2022¹⁷⁷. The Act contains a list of measures which may be adopted to address the COVID-19 pandemic¹⁷⁸ if a “state of pandemic emergency” is declared¹⁷⁹, and sets forth the conditions of their judicial review¹⁸⁰. The state of pandemic emergency was declared from 27 February 2021 to 5 May 2022¹⁸¹.

Judicial review of pandemic measures has continued, and an audit was conducted by the Ministry of Health to identify shortcomings in the process of their adoption.

The administrative courts, the Supreme Administrative Court and the Constitutional Court have continued to review measures and laws enacted in the context of the COVID-19 pandemic¹⁸². Several measures were annulled, chiefly due to lack of proper justification of the measure and a lack of competence for its adoption. Courts also found that certain measures were re-enacted immediately after having been struck down, without remedying the identified shortcomings¹⁸³. In reaction to a high number of measures declared unlawful by courts, the Ministry of Health conducted an internal audit to analyse the process of drafting of the measures¹⁸⁴. The audit concluded in August 2021 found that the process of adoption of measures lacked methodology

The state of emergency was declared in order to enable the police and state administration to process faster the support to and registrations of the large number of refugees arriving from Ukraine, without limiting human rights and freedoms. On 29 March 2022 and again on 19 May 2022 the Chamber of Deputies agreed to the extension of the state of emergency.

and pointed to issues of competency. It also concluded that judgments of the Supreme Administrative Court were not always respected¹⁸⁵.

The projects ‘eCollection’ and ‘eLegislation’, which have suffered from delays, are ongoing. The projects aim to set up portals, which would enable easier control and participation in the legislative process¹⁸⁶. As already reported in the 2021 Rule of Law Report¹⁸⁷, they were delayed due to the state of emergency and to the impact of restrictions related to the COVID-19 pandemic but continue. When operational, they will increase the transparency of the legislative drafting and amendment process, make it fully digitalised and make accessible both the consolidated and amended versions of promulgated legislation and other related documents to the public¹⁸⁸. The projects are expected to be fully operational from 1 January 2024.

No steps have been made towards acting on recommendations for the establishment of a National Human Rights Institution (NHRI) compliant with the Paris principles. As already reported in the 2020 Rule of Law Report¹⁸⁹, despite recommendations from the UN Universal Periodic Review (UPR)¹⁹⁰, Czechia has not yet established a national human rights institution (NHRI) in line with the Paris Principles. There are no specific plans in this regard by the Government¹⁹¹. The Public Defender of Rights (Ombudsperson) performs some of the duties of a NHRI¹⁹². However, it does not have the broad mandate to promote and protect human rights as required by the Paris Principles¹⁹³. Stakeholders reiterated¹⁹⁴ concerns over statements and conduct of the current Public Defender of Rights, in particular regarding Roma or LGBTIQ people¹⁹⁵. The draft law on the Defender of Children’s Rights, mentioned in the 2021 Rule of Law Report¹⁹⁶, was not adopted in time before the end of the legislative period in autumn 2021. The Government has no current plans to submit a new proposal¹⁹⁷.

Work is ongoing to enhance the participation of civil society in policy-making processes. Stakeholders reported that professional and business organisations are regularly consulted in the decision-making process¹⁹⁸, while involvement of civil society organisations (CSOs) is much less systematic¹⁹⁹. The Strategy for Cooperation between Public Administration and NGOs from July 2021²⁰⁰ contains concrete measures to support effective partnership and cooperation between public administration and the non-profit sector. A public consultation was organised in January 2022 on a draft methodology for the participation of civil society representatives in advisory and working bodies of the government and in the development of state administration documents. The main goal of the methodology is to contribute to the effective use of participatory processes within advisory and working bodies and in the development of public policies, strategic materials, legislative and other non-legislative materials by individual ministries and other central administrative authorities. Following the approval of the finalized methodology by the Government Council of NGOs, selected ministries will carry out its validation until the end of 2024²⁰¹.

Concerns have been expressed regarding obstacles to accessing public funding by civil society organisations. While the general regulatory framework for freedom of association, expression and assembly is set-out and implemented fairly²⁰², the space for civil society has been downgraded from open to narrowed over concerns over declining media independence²⁰³. Certain stakeholders report obstacles in access to public funding for certain types of CSOs, in particular those engaged in environmental, rule of law, LGBTIQ or asylum-related issues and advocacy. They consider that there is a high administrative burden which creates further obstacles to access public funding, and that the termination of a tax exemption for entities carrying out public benefit activities also limits funding²⁰⁴. Negative public discourse, targeting in particular CSOs raising awareness of developments linked to conflict of interest and corruption, or LGBTIQ activists, has also been reported²⁰⁵.
